

An Appeal To Human Sanity...Preserving Life On Our Mother Earth Planet....

Scientists are the best environmentally enlightened people on Earth. Their systematic study of the life of other animal species and plants that are sharing the planet with us, make them aware of the catastrophic changes that were taking place since the advent of the Industrial Revolution and the growth of world population with their over-growing increasing nutritional needs. Millions of livestock, birds, poultry and fish are daily slaughtered to feed the higher demands of more developing affluent rich nations. Besides, there seems to be no forceful legislation protecting the extinction of other living rich variety of the Earth wonderful collection of species that were once abundant on land and oceans. The environmental changes to the climate due to increased emission of carbon dioxide and other toxic products are gradually destroying all forms of life on the planet. It is the obligation and responsibility of the scientific bodies and organizations to carry their moral duty towards protecting and preserving other species. It is disappointing to learn that the US government is reconsidering the recent Paris environmental accord. If the measures fail to go through, I do not doubt that in the next century, most humans would have to wear oxygen masks to keep alive and many species would disappear from the planet. The politicians must be more responsible by not allowing the present mass production of luxury products to continue. The big co-operations and their influence should be curtailed otherwise humans face a life and death situation.
